J. D. CALDWELL, Asijnta DOG LANGUAGE. Sentiments of the Canine Tribe as Expressed By the Wagging Tall There can be no question that the chief delight of wild dogs, as with modern hounds and sporting dogs, is in the chase and its accompanying excitement and consequences. One of the most thrilling moments to the human hunter (and doubtless to the canine) and one big with that most poignant of all delights, anticipation of pleasurable excitement cembined with muscular activity, is when the presence of game is first detected. As we have watching the behavior in a pack of foxhounds, this is invariably the time when tails are wagged for the common good. The wagging is an almost invariably accompaniment of this form of pleasare, which is one of the chiefest among the agreeable emotions when in the wild state. Owing to some inosculation of pervous mechanism, which at present we cannot unravel, the association of pleasure and wagging has be come so inseparable that the movement of the tail follows the emotion, what ever may call it forth. An explanation of a similar kind one be found for the fact that dogs depress their tails when threatened or scolded. When running away the tall would be the part nearest the pursuer, and therefore most likely to be seized. It was therefore securely tucked away between the hind legs. The act of running away is naturally closely associated with the emotion of fear, and therefore | Englishmen have found that the semen the gesture of putting the tail between surfaced tracks are not what they are the legs becomes an invariable concorn mitant of retreat or submission in the

J. A. GROVES,

My mother sings—her value is low and awest.

Again a child, I nestic at her feet.

What though the song a simple inflaby?

I'll hear no awester means till I die.

Mr Mother.

My mother smiles, a bright-eyed, happy glances. Again a youth. I lead the merry dance.

Yet, is the throng of girlhood's resty grace.

I see no loveller vision than my mether's task.

My mother prays for strength to guille my Aright slong the thorny path of truth.
What though no wealth or fame await that

I rise without a care to meet the centing day. My mother sleeps—shi me i—so water, no sound Can reach me from beneath the still cost ground. Yet sometimes to my dreams I hear her stug
